Reviving Frank Lloyd Wright

According to online magazine, Dazeen, an organization called the Frank Lloyd Wright Revival Initiative has big plans to resurrect the architect's demolished or unbuilt projects.

The first project scheduled will be the visitor's center for Banff National Park.

Originally commissioned in 1911, the Banff visitor center was finished in 1913, but due to frequent flooding in the area, it was demolished in the late 1930s.

Now, the Frank Lloyd Wright Revival Initiative wants to bring back the unique design.

Frank Lloyd Wright (born Frank Lincoln Wright, June 8, 1867 – April 9, 1959) was an American architect, interior designer, writer, and educator, who designed more than 1,000 structures; 532 of which were completed.

What makes Wright's structures so unique and timeless is their harmony with humanity and the environment, a philosophy he called 'organic architecture'.

This philosophy was best exemplified by Fallingwater (1935), which has been called "the best all-time work of American architecture". Wright was a leader of the Prairie School movement of architecture.

Wright went so far as to coin his own term: 'Usonian'. Wright proposed the use of the adjective Usonian in place of American to describe his particular New World character of an American landscape—distinct and free of previous architectural conventions.
